

FIGHTING COVID-19: AJWS's Human Rights Response to the Global Pandemic

A GLOBAL PUBLIC HEALTH CRISIS

The COVID-19 pandemic has reached all 19 countries AJWS serves, wreaking havoc on a catastrophic scale. The pandemic is disrupting and destroying lives everywhere, but we know from our 35 years of experience responding to disasters that this crisis poses an existential threat to the vulnerable communities AJWS supports across Africa, Asia, Central America and the Caribbean.

The pandemic is magnifying inequality between rich and poor in devastating ways, and igniting an increased rise in authoritarianism, bigotry and violence in the communities where we work:

- People living in slums or refugee camps are unable to observe social distancing.
- Impoverished countries lack healthcare and economic infrastructure to weather the crisis.
- Lockdowns have cut off vital food and supplies, and many governments have failed to provide financial relief.
- Leaders have circulated misinformation about how the virus spreads and blamed the pandemic on minorities—sparking assaults and arrests.
- Authoritarian regimes are abusing their power—muzzling the press and backing legislation that threatens human rights.

AJWS'S EMERGENCY RESPONSE

When COVID-19 emerged, AJWS was well-positioned to respond—due to our experience rising to the challenges of Ebola and decades of responding to other emergencies. We nimbly shifted our support of our 487 grantees so they could battle the pandemic and defend human rights under threat. Our focus is on the dual imperatives to save lives in the short-term and protect human rights in the long-term, acting on our Jewish responsibility to repair the world and protect the inherent human dignity of all people.

SPOTLIGHT: HALTING COVID-19 IN DISPLACED PERSONS CAMPS

In Sulawesi, Indonesia, COVID-19 has cruelly struck just two years after a tsunami and earthquake killed nearly 5,000 people and left thousands more homeless in 2018. These tsunami survivors now live in makeshift displaced persons camps, because the Indonesian government never rebuilt permanent housing.

With support from AJWS, a local organization, WALHI, is providing emergency aid and protective equipment for these families. They're also working with a coalition of human rights groups advocating for the Indonesian government to provide the aid it promised to these citizens two years ago. WALHI's director, Haris Abdul, said, "We're together in this crisis and we won't leave anyone behind."

emergency food, personal protective equipment and other essentials. Now, AJWS is investing in the long-term wellbeing of these communities by ensuring that they have enduring sources of food and that they can access key services, like reproductive health care and psychosocial support.

●●● AJWS'S COVID-19 RESPONSE HAS FOUR PILLARS:

● Addressing Urgent Humanitarian Needs

We are enabling organizations to provide threatened communities with desperately needed aid. When COVID-19 first struck, our grantees distributed

●● Spreading Life-Saving Information

Because many communities lack accurate information about COVID-19—due to false reporting and limited internet access—AJWS developed a toolkit on infection prevention in 10 languages to help our grantees spread safety information via the radio, loudspeakers and social media. Further, AJWS is supporting networks of local journalists to provide their communities with accurate COVID-19 coverage. Our grantees have the complete trust of their communities, making them vital messengers of life-saving information.

●●● Building More Sustainable Communities

The pandemic has led to massive job loss globally, and families increasingly cannot afford food, medical care and other necessities. AJWS grantees are supporting their communities to become more resilient—developing alternative sources of livelihood, producing their own food, accessing local markets to sell homemade goods and more, so they can not only survive this crisis, but become better prepared for whatever lies ahead.

●●●● Advocating for the Rights of the Most Vulnerable

AJWS grantees are launching powerful advocacy campaigns to ensure their governments are accountable and responsive to the needs of their people—equitably distributing relief funding, improving protections for frontline healthcare workers and more. The activists we support are also battling discrimination that bars minorities from hospitals and fighting oppressive laws passed under the guise of containing the virus. To amplify the advocacy of these global activists, our staff in Washington, D.C. are calling upon Congress, the State Department, fellow funders and international institutions to support policies that protect the most vulnerable people caught in the crossfires of COVID-19.

AJWS GRANTEES IN ACTION AROUND THE WORLD

■ Flattening the curve through PPE and education:

In Thailand, when the price of protective masks surged out of reach for the poor, AJWS grantee Love Pattaya began buying supplies for rural communities to make personal protective equipment for their villages and local hospitals. And in Haiti, an organization of independent journalists—AyiboPost—reached over 600,000 people with a series of videos and articles teaching communities how to prevent infection.

PROVIDING UNWAVERING AND FLEXIBLE SUPPORT

AJWS is continuing our support to all 487 of our grantees and increasing our grants to those fighting COVID-19 directly. We have shifted to flexible general operating support so these organizations can respond to emergencies and adapt their work to this rapidly changing landscape.

■ Reducing violence against women:

With domestic abuse surging around the world as people are unable to leave their homes, grassroots organizations are providing a lifeline for women and girls. In Senegal, AJWS grantee Association des Juristes Sénégalaises (AJS) is providing psychosocial support to women suffering domestic violence-related trauma; they also opened phone lines for women to declare instances of domestic violence linked to the pandemic.

■ Fighting unlawful arrests: After 23 homeless LGBTQI+ youth in Uganda were violently imprisoned and falsely charged with spreading COVID-19, AJWS grantee Human Rights and Awareness Promotion Forum (HRAPF) mobilized emergency legal support. For nearly two months, HRAPF fought relentlessly as the youth were held without bail and violently harassed. On May 19th, the charges were dropped and the young people were finally freed. Uganda's High Court ruled that the youth were denied inalienable human rights—and awarded them each nearly $1,400 dollars in restitution.
