NEXT YEAR IN A JUST WORLD

A pocket Haggadah for social change

by American Jewish World Service
Dear Friends,

For generations, Jews on Seder night have recounted our ancestors’ exodus from Egypt and their long walk toward freedom. This journey continues today.

As we taste tears in the saltwater and eat the bitter herbs, we remember that attacks on human rights are proliferating in our own country and around the world. As we recount the plagues, we know that racism, violence, poverty and hunger continue to plague our societies. And as we drink four cups of wine and raise our voices in song, we tell stories of freedom and prepare to take action as activists and allies.

I hope you will enjoy this abridged version of the AJWS Haggadah. For even more readings, rituals and stories of change, you can download our full Haggadah at www.ajws.org/Passover.

Happy Passover—chag sameach!

ORDER OF THE PASSOVER SEDER

The elements of our journey

Kadesh: The first cup
Urchatz: Ritual washing of the hands
Karpas: Dipping a vegetable in saltwater
Yachatz: Breaking the middle matzah
Magid: Telling the Passover story
Rachtzah: Ritual handwashing with a blessing
Motzi-Matzah: Blessing and eating the matzah
Maror: Blessing and eating the bitter herbs
Korech: Eating matzah and maror together
Shulchan Orech: The festive meal
Tzafun: Eating the afikoman, the last matzah of the evening
Barech: Birkat Hamazon, the blessing after the meal
Hallel: Praise
Nirtzah: Next year in a just world
The Passover story began with an awakening, when Moses saw the burning bush and recognized he was called to lead his people from slavery to freedom. May this first cup of wine be our awakening, calling us to resist inequality in our world today and pursue freedom for all.

Baruch Atah A-donai, E-loheinu Melech ha-olam, borei peri hagafen.
We praise God, Ruler of Everything, who creates the fruit of the vine.

Baruch Atah A-donai, E-loheinu Melech ha-olam, shehecheyanu vekiyemanu vehigi'anu lazman hazeh.
We praise God, Ruler of Everything, who has kept us alive, raised us up and brought us to this moment.

Conversation Spark: What injustices are you awakening to this year—either in your own community or around the globe?
We dip a green vegetable—karpas—into saltwater, to taste the tears of grief our ancestors shed during slavery in Egypt, mingled with their hope for a future of freedom. Tonight, we recognize that these tears and hope are also our own ...

Tears of outrage at disasters, inequality and injustice in our midst.

Tears of fear for the uncertain future of our planet.

Hope that we can repair these wounds.

Hope for equality, peace and justice.

Baruch Atah A-donai, E-loheinu Melech ha-olam, borei peri ha-adama.

We praise God, Ruler of Everything, who creates the fruit of the earth.
We break the middle matzah and begin the Passover story, chronicling the Israelites’ exodus and imagining that we too made this arduous journey.

To experience this more deeply, observe a Syrian Jewish custom: Place the bundle of matzah on your shoulder and recite the biblical verse that describes the Israelites preparing to flee:

... Misharotam tzerurot besimlotam al shich‘mam, uv‘nei Yisrael asoo kidvar Moshe ...

... Their bread-kneading bowls wrapped in their cloaks on their shoulders, the Children of Israel did as Moses commanded ...

Conversation Spark: Imagine yourself as a refugee in ancient Egypt or today. Take turns sharing: Where are you coming from? Where are you going? What are you carrying with you?
TODAY’S FREEDOM SEEKERS

SURVIVORS OF THE ROHINGYA GENOCIDE

More than 700,000 Rohingya people fled Burma in 2017, walking hundreds of miles to escape genocide. Today they live in refugee camps in Bangladesh, where they face overcrowding, frequent fires and have barely enough food for survival. Rohingya activists are advocating tirelessly to improve these conditions, hold Burma accountable and secure a safe return to their homeland. Photo by SK Hasam/Alamy Stock Photo
On all other nights, we eat because we’re hungry—but tonight, we eat to symbolize hardship and freedom.

On all other nights, we sit or stand to eat—but tonight, we are mindful of how our bodies carry the burden of oppression or relax in the comfort of liberation.

On all other nights, we chat over dinner—but tonight, we recount our history and our aspirations.

On all other nights, we may feel apathy or indifference—but on this night, we are alert to injustice, and commit ourselves to building a better future.
The Haggadah answers the four questions with the following:

Our legacy as the descendants of enslaved people charges us with great responsibility: We must stand up for the stranger because we were strangers. And because we were freed, we must pursue freedom for others.

Avadim hayinu lepharo bemitzrayim, vayotziyeinu A-donai, E-loheinu misham b’yad chazakah u’vizroa netuyah.

We were slaves to Pharaoh in Egypt, and God brought us out from there with a strong hand and an outstretched arm.

עבדים בניינו לפרא מסיריה, ויצינו ה, א-לאינו מסיריה ביד חזקה ובזרע נטויה.

Our legacy as the descendants of enslaved people charges us with great responsibility: We must stand up for the stranger because we were strangers. And because we were freed, we must pursue freedom for others.
As we read each plague that hastened our freedom, let us remember the millions of people around the world enduring plagues in our society today. We spill 10 drops of wine from our cups in sorrow and solidarity.

We comfort and mourn those whose blood has been spilled.

We protest the proliferation of violence.

We confront infestations of hatred and fear.

We appeal to all people to act with humanity.

We overcome the sickness of racism and bigotry.

We care for one another when pandemics strike.

We respond to storms and disasters that claim lives.

We stop hatred from filling the air by raising our voices for change.

We enlighten ourselves to bias, prejudice and injustice.

We repair injustice today so the next generation can live in freedom tomorrow.
CLIMATE ACTIVISTS

In northern Kenya, catastrophic droughts have left millions at risk of starvation. Around the globe, the climate crisis is decimating crops the rural poor depend on. But organizations like Samburu Women Women Trust, pictured here distributing grain, are helping build resilience. They’re among dozens of organizations supported by AJWS that are training communities to grow drought-resilient crops, gain new sources of income so they can buy food during droughts, and protect the environment for the next generation. Dayenu recalls every step to redemption: the departure from Egypt, the splitting of the sea, sustenance in the wilderness, the giving of the Torah and our arrival in the land of Israel. And although we express gratitude for each, we know we would not be free without them all.

As today’s freedom-seekers flee hunger, persecution and violence, we will stay the course as activists and allies, as long as it takes to bend the arc of history toward justice.

If we witness injustice and inequity, but do not respond ... It will not be enough.

If we speak out today, but remain silent tomorrow ... It will not be enough.

However, if we persevere until there’s stability, peace and justice ... Dayenu! Then it will be enough.
After Keji lost her parents to the violent conflict in South Sudan, she and her siblings fled to Arua, Uganda—joining nearly 800,000 refugees. But she’s recovering with support from RICE West Nile, an AJWS grantee that helps refugees rebuild their lives. The organization supplied Keji with rent and the tools to become a tailor so she can provide for herself—and return to school. Munduru Liberia, a leader at RICE, says, “What keeps us inspired, is that hope has never run dry. The support that we receive from partners like AJWS has been helping us to boost and change the environment of the refugees.” Photo courtesy of RICE West Nile
The first cup of wine awakened us to injustice and to our capacity to bring about change. The second cup is the first step toward realizing that change.

We raise our glass in solidarity with all those who experience injustice around the world and dedicate ourselves to bringing freedom together as allies.

Baruch Atah A-donai, E-loheinu Melech ha-olam, borei peri hagafen.

We praise God, Ruler of Everything, who creates the fruit of the vine.

Conversation Spark: With whom would you like to grow in solidarity this year? How can you deepen those relationships?
We turn to three symbolic foods on the Seder plate: pesach (the shank bone), matzah (the unleavened bread the Israelites ate on their way to freedom) and maror (bitter herbs reminding us of slavery).

We eat the matzah and maror separately and then make a sandwich, like the sage Hillel, who ate the three together. Tonight, the “korech sandwich” represents the oppression and freedom that still coexist in our world and our responsibility to tip the scales toward justice.

Conversation Spark: What foods or objects symbolize injustice or liberation to you? Go around the table and share ideas for modern symbols that you could add to the Seder plate to represent these ideas in your own life or our world today.
The third cup of wine is our call to action. We commit tonight to acting on our values to bring freedom to all:

We will not stand idly by.

We will stand up, speak out and protest inequity and hate.

We will act on our belief that change is possible.

Baruch Atah Adonai, Eloheinu Melech ha-olam, borei peri hagafen.

We praise God, Ruler of Everything, who creates the fruit of the vine.

Conversation Spark: What's one tangible commitment that you can make this year to advance justice?
REPRODUCTIVE RIGHTS ACTIVISTS

In El Salvador, women face some of the world’s most severe bans on abortion—even miscarriage is punishable by prison. But women’s rights activists are resisting: Red Salvadoreña de Defensoras de DDHH, an organization supported by AJWS, seeks to decriminalize abortion and promote women’s access to safe health care. In this photo, they’re marching with their movement, declaring, “Her strength is the right to decide.” Photo by Andrea Padilla Moreno
We place a cup in the center of the table for the prophet Miriam, in whose merit a flowing well quenched the thirst of the Israelites in the desert. Everyone fills the cup by pouring water from their own glass, symbolizing the role that each of us has in bringing redemption for all.

Next, we fill the fourth cup of wine and open the door for Elijah. As we turn our gaze toward the door, let us pray for and work toward true redemption: a time when all people will live in freedom.
The final cup of wine symbolizes the final arc of our journey from slavery to freedom tonight.

We savor this taste of redemption and will carry it forward into our lives, as we continue on the journey toward freedom for all.

Baruch Atah A-donai, E-loheinu Melech ha-olam, borei peri hagafen.

We praise God, Ruler of Everything, who creates the fruit of the vine.

Conversation Spark: What’s one moment you’ve had this past year that felt like a small piece of redemption? How does that feeling motivate you to work toward collective freedom?
The traditional end to the Seder, “Next Year in Jerusalem,” is the Jewish people’s millennia-old hope for redemption in the year ahead. We also yearn for …

- Freedom from bigotry and oppression
- Equality for women, girls and persecuted minorities
- Sustenance for communities living in hunger
- Peace in societies torn by war
- A safe harbor for refugees and survivors of violence
- And the promise of dignity and human rights for all

Together, with those around the Seder table and with all who pursue justice, we pray: “Next year in a just world.” And through our actions from this Passover to the next, let us make this dream a reality.
